THE SITUATION AT TANGIER.

Washington, April 4.—Quite a flurry has been created among the State Department officials by the cable dispatch from Tangier, stating in an interview cabled to the Madrid Epoca that Secretary Bayard had stated that Captain McCalla, of the Enterprise, had orders under no possible contingency to use his guns. The dispatch to the Spanish journal appears either to have been a gross misstatement or a wilful perversion of the Secretary's utterances on the subject.

Assistant Secretary Rives says:
'Every intelligent person should know that the State Department issues no orders to naval officers. In this case, so far as I know, there has been absolutely no communication, director indirect, between the Department and Captain McCalla or any other naval officer. "This, then, is the present status of affairs. As for any special instructions issued to Captain McCalla for his guidance in this difficulty, none have been given him, un-less by Admiral Green, under whose im-mediate authority he has been since the Enterprise touched the Gibraltar. An officer in command of a United States man-of-war, however, does, of course, obey the rules and regulations of the service, and obof-war, however, does, of course, obey the rules and regulations of the service, and observes the usages of civilized nations, which constitute a sort of general international law. Captain McCalla has no orders not to fire on Tangier, but he will not do so unless it should become necessary. He is now lying at anchor within cable communication of the Navy Department, and can easily inform us of any unexpected change. If, however, a hostile demonstration of force should be made against him by the Moors—if, for instance, they should go a step too far in this sport they seem to be having with our little vessel and fire upon her—McCalla would not only fire back, but he would knock the dirty little town into a cocked hat in even feet the less time than it takes to tell it.

"The impression that the United States has formulated its policy in this case and that final orders have been issued in accordance with it is a false one. We ary, as it were, within speaking distance of both consultand man-of-war and are now waiting for full reports from both. No instructions have been issued, and none will be until further statements have been received unless a special exigency should arise."
